G.O.P. Assails New Charter Plan For C.I.A. as 'Totally Inadequate'

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6 (UPI) — The Republican National Committee today criticized a proposed new charter for the Central Intelligence Agency as "totally inadequate" and urged the drafters to "go back to the drawing board."

The committee chairman, Bill Brock, said at a news conference that the proposed revision of the agency's 1947 charter should provide for the weakening of freedom of information laws and the upgrading of secret operations.

"The pending intelligence charter being propounded by the administration in the form of the 'National Intelligence Reorganization and Reform Act of 1978' is totally inadequate and unacceptable," Mr. Brock said.

The revision, worked out by the Carter Administration and the Senate Intelligence Committee, died in the last session of Congress but may be reintroduced later this year.

"The need for a comprehensive intelligence charter geared not only to present realities, but also to our future national security requirements, dictates that we go back to the drawing board and start anew," Mr. Brock said.
